HOME GARDENER'S JOB SPEEDS UP IN JUNE

The home gardener's annual battle against weeds, insects, and diseases, hits high gear in June.

L. B. Wilkins, VPI gardening specialist, offers several suggestions for June garden care.

He says there are several important rules for successful chemical control of diseases and insects. Start applications early. Use recommended materials. Cover the entire plant, including both bottom and top of leaves. Spray or dust often enough to insure control. Use rotenone or malathion to control most garden insects. DDT also can be used successfully for some insects.

During June, weeds which have been giving some trouble all spring and usually develop into the biggest garden trouble .Frequent, shallow cultivation will help control weeds successfully. Destroy them when they are young. Always use a cultivator rather than a turning plow in the garden. Chemical weed control is not very practical for the home garden, although it has meant much to the commercial grower. The home gardener has so many different kinds of vegetables in a small area that it is hard to apply chemicals efficiently for weed

We Are Not Alone

Lesson for May 31, 1959

EVERY MAN who stands up for what he believes to be right in the sight of God—stands up, speaks up, and works to make the divine dream come true—every such person will have times of deep discouragement. An American will think of the familiar examples of Washington and Lincoln who went through dark times when no one, that is to say nobody who carried much weight, seemed to be on their side; times when they even wondered if they could be on God's side. Any one who speaks for a cause which has not yet become popular, any one who speaks courageously against the prevailing winds of belief in his time, will feel sooner or later that he stands alone.

Dr. Foreman

Prophets in Flight

It has often been so with God's prophets. Indeed, the picture our minds draw for us, of brave prophets bearding tyrants in their palaces, thundering God's judgments on nations and individuals, men unafraid, not caring what men might say or do so long as they were speaking for God, that picture does not always fit. Consider the prophet, Elijah, a brave man most of the time, but running now, running away, as far away as his legs would take him. And from what? Just a woman. True, she had threatened to butcher him. But Elijah had lived through threats before. The thing was, this woman was a queen, so much a queen that her wretched husband never dared say No to her. When she threatened to do anything bad, you could be sure her heart (a bad one) was in it! So when they told Elijah what she said, he lost no time getting out of there. Forty days and forty nights he fled. And when God asked him why, "I only am left," sometimes with considerable following, who learn nothing from experience? A man who learns nothing from history, who scorns to take advice from wiser men, who listens to the poorest advice rather than the best, who hears only what he wants to hear—such men are not unknown in the life of church and nation.

Government for Whom?

Another mistake Rehoboam made was to forget why government exists. He thought of it as an arrangement for his own benefit. This is not a notion that got buried with Rehoboam. The notion outlived him by many centuries and is still with us. There are politicians in our country who may belong to one party or another, what the party stands for makes little difference with them, what they are interested in is winning elections so as to get political jobs. Government, in their eyes, is for the benefit of the politician, the man in the government job. The truth is, that when government really is only for the officeholder's benefit, it is time for a revolution. The real aim of good government is the benefit of the people. If the people are benefited, then the government is good; otherwise not. The people of Israel had had it hard in Solomon's time. "My father [Solomon] chastised you with whips," said Rehoboam. In other words, "You took a beating." Rehoboam thought that was a good thing. But the people didn't.

Where Does Power Come From?

It did not occur to Rehoboam (who was about 40 years old at this time and had had time to learn, but never did) that if he was to be king at all he would have to be elected. Saul and David and Solomon had all been elected by the people. Our American idea of government with the consent of the governed isn't the whole idea. Government by the people, by their will and choice, is not merely an American idea. It goes back to the ancient Hebrews. You can find it in Deuteronomy 17 already. But poor stupid Rehoboam didn't discover this till too late. He thought if he shook his sword and shouted, it would be enough. It would have been, if power comes from the top down. It is not, in a country where the power is in the people. Power comes first of all from God. But he knows (and we find out soon enough) how dangerous power is when one man tries to steal it all.
